

A Ghost Story

On 10th August, 1901, it was a cold and misty day. Two friends, Anne and Eleanor, visited a magnificent palace built by a former king.

At first, they walked through the splendid rooms and beautifully decorated halls of the palace. The tour guide explained the history and told them that the queen had a favourite little house called Le Petit Trianon. She had been executed on the guillotine.

Anne and Eleanor decided to take a look at the house by themselves. They set out to walk through the huge garden. Finally they came to the house.

“Let’s go in and have a look,” said Eleanor eagerly. “I think we’d better go back,” said Ann, who began to feel uneasy.

“Well, we can peep through the door.” Eleanor was always an adventurous girl.

When they looked inside, they saw a beautiful woman standing in the hallway with her back towards them. Her dress was long and she had curly hair. Suddenly the woman turned and they saw her pale face!

The woman's face was ugly and very terrible looking.

The woman watched them. She said, 'Hi!'

They thought she was friendly. Then, she looked grim. Suddenly a black shadow appeared in front of them.

When they woke up, the woman was sitting on the bed. She said, 'You guys are bold. You dare to break into my castle.'

They said, 'We did not do it intentionally. We are just curious. We are so sorry.'

But the woman did not listen to them. After that, the woman and the girls were gone. Nobody saw them again.
